

Telehealth Consent & Disclaimer

Purpose of Telehealth

Telehealth uses electronic communications, including secure video and related technology, to provide health care when the patient and clinician are in different locations.

What to Expect

- Your identity and physical location may be confirmed at the beginning of the visit.
- You should participate from a private location with a reliable internet connection and a device capable of secure audio/video communication.
- The clinician may determine that an in-person examination, testing, urgent care, emergency care, or referral is necessary.
- Prescriptions, laboratory orders, referrals, and treatment decisions are made only when clinically appropriate and permitted by law.

Potential Benefits

- Convenient access to care without travel to a traditional office.
- Improved continuity and follow-up for conditions appropriate for virtual care.
- Opportunity for education, medication review, and care coordination.

Potential Risks and Limitations

- Technology failure, poor connection, or interruption may affect the visit.
- A virtual examination may not provide all information obtainable during an in-person physical examination.
- Electronic communications may carry privacy and security risks despite safeguards.
- Additional testing, records, referral, or in-person evaluation may be needed.

Patient Responsibilities

- Provide complete and accurate health information.
- Tell the clinician where you are physically located during each telehealth visit.
- Do not record the visit unless all required parties consent and recording is permitted by law.
- Follow emergency and in-person care recommendations when advised.

Consent and Right to Stop

Before receiving telehealth services, patients will be asked to provide any consent required by applicable law and practice policy. You may ask questions and may request to stop a telehealth encounter; an alternative form of care may then be necessary.

Emergency Care

Telehealth is not an emergency service. For severe chest pain, severe shortness of breath, stroke symptoms, major trauma, uncontrolled bleeding, severe allergic reaction, suicidal thoughts, or another emergency, call 911 or go to the nearest emergency department.

Availability

Telehealth services are available only when the patient is physically located in a state or jurisdiction where the treating clinician is legally authorized to provide care.

Contact

For non-emergency questions about telehealth services, contact 813-771-3233 or info@livinglifeonpurposehealth.com. Mailing address: 7901 4th St. N #36153, St. Petersburg, FL 33702.